There are over 200 million children around the world who are forced to labour in fields, factories and as domestics. Because of gender discrimination in the household, the community and, indeed, all levels of society, girls are more likely to be deprived of education.

Education International urges its members to support the World Day against Child Labour, and to advocate all year round for every child’s right to quality education. It is everyone’s responsibility.

Teacher unions take action!

12 June | World Day Against Child Labour

www.ei-ie.org